

Any further copyprotection measures will do nothing to stop piracy in the long term but will hurt early adopting consumers now. Putting more restrictions on content to make the movie studios and other content providers happy because they say it's necessary is not only wrong but takes away the rights that we already enjoy in being able to make a backup copy of content we rightfully paid for. We do not need any more DMCA crap that is turning this country into a police state controlled by the media industries able to throw money at whomever they can to stay in power and make even more money. Just my 2 cents, enforce current anti-piracy laws instead of making new ones and making people spend even more money to enjoy the content that they pay for.
